

Texture Formation Across the Differential Horizon

テクスチャ生成と差の地平線

Across the differential horizon, un-generated indeterminacy does not appear directly as physical structure. What becomes physically accessible is only the compressed texture extracted through renormalization. Divergence marks the breakdown of this texture near boundary contact, while symmetry and conserved quantities emerge as stable macro-textures of integrated relations.